Outlook

Supported by a solid financial position, a robust new-home market and a stronger Alberta and Calgary economy, Genesis remains well-positioned to take advantage of growth opportunities.

Driven by improved oil and natural gas prices and increases in international and interprovincial immigration, prospects for the local economy are positive for 2022. However, increasing interest rates and inflationary pressures are impacting home affordability. While housing price gains, rising lending rates and consumer inflation are expected to weigh on demand in the second half of this year, home supply in the Calgary market remains tight at just under 2 months. In its June report, the Calgary Real Estate Board noted that further interest rate increases are expected to slow sales activity, with some slippage in price growth possible in the coming months. Considering market conditions and economic uncertainty, Genesis remains cautious in executing its strategy.
